Q.1 – XYZ Manufacturing, a company in the automotive parts industry, was facing the challenge of recruiting 10 skilled machine operators within one month to meet its production deadlines. The HR department was under pressure to ensure the hiring process without compromising the quality of the candidates.

One of the main obstacles was the limited availability of experienced machine operators in the local area. Additionally, the company had struggled with high turnover rates in similar roles in the past, which made it crucial to find long-term, committed employees this time around.

To meet the hiring target, XYZ's HR team posted job advertisements on local job boards and partnered with vocational training centres. Applicants were screened based on their experience and qualifications, with recommendations from past employers playing a significant role in the selection process.

Shortlisted candidates were invited for interviews with both the production manager and the HR team. These interviews primarily focused on assessing their technical skills, attitude, and commitment to staying with the company for the long term.

By the end of the month, XYZ successfully hired 10 machine operators. However, within three months, two of the new hires had already left the company, raising concerns about the effectiveness of the selection process and the company's ability to retain new employees.

1. Discuss alternative 5 sourcing strategies that would help the company attract suitable and relevant candidates in the future?

(5 marks) [CO1]

2. Suggest 5 improvements which XYZ company can make in its selection process to make efficient hiring decisions?

(5 marks) [CO1]

Q.2 - Explain the difference between a Job Description (JD) and a Job Specification (JS). Discuss the key elements that would be included while drafting a job. Additionally, discuss how you would involve stakeholders in this process and the importance of their input.

(10 marks) [CO2]

Q.3- In your firm, some employees working on high-value projects have raised concerns that their compensation does not reflect their increased workload and responsibilities. As an HR manager, you need to address these concerns while ensuring that compensation is fair, transparent, and linked to performance.

Firstly, how would you conduct a performance-based compensation review to identify the key metrics that reflect the increased workload and contributions of employees in these critical projects, ensuring that the compensation system aligns with performance outputs? Secondly, given the potential for budgetary constraints, what alternative forms of compensation, such as non-monetary rewards or performance-based bonuses, would you propose to maintain employee satisfaction while adhering to the company's financial limitations?

Q.4 In a tech company where projects are increasingly team-based, some employees feel that individual appraisals do not accurately reflect their contributions to the team's success. How would you interpret and revise the company's appraisal policies to account for team-based performance metrics while maintaining individual accountability?

Firstly, how would you introduce team-based performance metrics into the appraisal system to ensure that the success of collaborative projects is appropriately recognized, without overshadowing individual efforts? Secondly, how would you ensure that individual contributions within a team are fairly assessed, particularly in situations where certain employees take on more leadership or critical roles within the team?
